

Doing Disability Ally Work

Disabled people are everywhere, and yet are mostly invisible to the nondisabled world. Everyone grew up learning stereotypes about disabled people. Some of these stereotypes are negative (“helpless,” “dependent,” “useless,” “dangerous”). Others seem positive but are just as limiting (“cheerful,” “inspiring,” “brave”). In order to end ableism (the system of oppression targeting disabled people), nondisabled people need to learn how to do disability ally work.

respect

- Recognize that disabled, chronically ill, D/deaf, Mad, and neurodivergent people have inherent worth and value.
- Listen to disabled people’s stories, experiences, and perspectives.
- Understand that having a disability does not make our lives any more inspirational, pitiful or tragic than yours. Our disabilities are ordinary and familiar parts of who we are.
- Ask before you offer help to a disabled person. What you assume is helpful may not be. Start with a friendly but non-intrusive question: “Can I provide assistance?” or “Can I get that for you?” Be aware that your offer may not be accepted. Disabled people are the experts about our own lives and what we need.
- Don't ask intrusive questions, however well-intentioned. Because of how disabled people are separated from society, many of us deal with daily curiosity about our bodyminds and lives. This can be irritating, exhausting, and demeaning.
- Challenge your own assumptions. Many people have disabilities that might not be apparent to you. Everyone has a right to request and use the access they need without being criticized or questioned.
- Ignore service dogs while they’re working. Don’t pet, feed, or interact with them.

language

- Don't use the words “cripple,” “defect,” “spastic,” “lame,” “retard,” and “crazy.” These words have long been used to bully and oppress disabled people. You may hear disabled people calling each other “crip” or “gimp,” This is “insider” language, akin to LGBT people calling each other “queer,” but isn’t appropriate language for non-disabled people to use. Not all disabled people like or use this “insider” language.
- Use the phrase “disabled people” or “people with disabilities.”
- When you hear other people use ableist language, take the opportunity to challenge and educate.
- Don't ask, “What’s wrong with you?” Disabled people have many different relationships with our bodyminds. Don’t assume you know what’s right or wrong.

access

- Work to create accessibility in your communities, workplaces, and places of worship. Ramps and elevators are vital, but access doesn't stop there.
- Access means creating an inclusive and welcoming space for all members of your community:
 - Ensure that people with mobility aids and/or personal attendants can use the bathrooms.
 - Minimize the presence of scented products and other triggers for people with chemical sensitivities with the goal of creating scent-free space.
 - Offer printed materials in alternative formats, such as Braille, large print, and audio.
 - Provide sign language interpreters and real time captioning.
 - Choose locations for community events near public transportation.
 - Offer sliding scales at events that cost money.
 - This is not an exhaustive list, only a starting place.
- Understand that no single accommodation will work for all disabled people. One solution doesn't fit all, but increased access does benefit everyone.
- Take your lead from disabled people. We know what works best for us.
- Be creative. Don't use lack of money as an excuse not to create access.

activism

- Educate yourself. Read about the disability rights movement and disability justice. Attend disability culture events.
- Follow the leadership of disabled people, particularly disabled people of color.
- Confront disability stereotypes and oppression—ableism—wherever you encounter them.
- Integrate ableism into your understanding of racism, classism, sexism, homophobia, transphobia, fatphobia, and xenophobia. These systems of oppression are all interlocked.
